

Last year's final exam

The exam will have two parts: an essay component and an ID component. Both will be weighed equally. The ID portion of the exam will be closed book and closed note. ID answers should be 1-2 paragraphs each, and should identify the ID item, place it in context, and explain its importance. (The exception is items from the map test, for which you should just identify the place on the map or place something on the blank map, as appropriate). The essay portion of the exam, which will be open-book and open-note, will include only ONE topic from the list of three, chosen at random. You must write the essay in class, but you may use any notes or other materials you bring with you. We recommend that you prepare detailed outlines of all three questions in advance. You may collaborate in the sense of discussing these questions ahead of time with other students, but you should draw up your own outlines and answers.

Citations for an in-class exam do not need to be formal. If the citation is from the syllabus, the author's name in parentheses will suffice. Lecture can be cited as "(Lawson, Date)". If the citation involves a specific fact or quote, you should include a page number. If you cite a work not included in the syllabus, you should include the full formal citation.

Essay topics

1. Gabriel García Márquez's fictitious village Macondo is often described as a microcosm of Latin America. Which features does García Márquez portray accurately? Which does he exaggerate? Which does he downplay or ignore altogether?
2. Next week you find yourself talking with an acquaintance who has recently returned from vacation in Mexico. He remarks (boorishly) on how poor the country seems in comparison to the United States, how incomplete the democratic transition seems, and how weak the rule of law is. The reason, he feels, is that Mexicans have a different attitude toward time, authority, and financial dealings. As he puts it: "They are always talking about mañana, and everyone is on the take." What sort of an explanation is this for underdevelopment and authoritarianism in Mexico? Do you agree with this perspective? What other explanations might you offer for differences between Mexico and the United States?
3. Evaluate the following statement: "Neoliberal democracy in Latin America is either a farce or a fraud, a comedy or a tragedy, depending on one's perspective; it is certainly no cure for the region's ills. The real problems that average Latin Americans confront – poverty, corruption, abuse at the hands of an indifferent state – remain unchanged."
